Past event

Information / Description:

As health-damaging levels of air pollutants in towns and cities continue, there is a need to identify and share information on delivering policies that offer quantifiable benefits for health, energy, urban design and transport.

The National Air Quality Conference in the UK, organised by Air Quality News, will explore some of the issues and the possible solutions to the continuing high levels of air pollution in communities. The Conference will serve as a platform for business, local authorities and others to learn and network.

The conference agenda includes presentations from many of the sector's leading specialists and is centred around 4 key areas:

- Are Low Emissions Zones achieving their aims?
- How to reduce freight emissions without impacting the economy?
- Are the public health risks of air pollution now being taken seriously?
- Innovation, development and green fuels.
